Serving Carrots.
A way of serving carrots is the following, evolved by a cook desirous, as all cooks should be, of "something new." The vegetable is scraped, diced and boiled till tender. Meanwhile a slice of onion is browned in a tablespoonful of butter. With this one tablespoonful of oil is rubbed smooth and mixed until the flavor is cooked. Then a cup of tomato juice, not heated, is added to the mixture with a half teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper. The whole is stewed together three or four minutes before being strained over the carrots, which have been drained. It is delicious, more palatable than the "carrot sauce" because it adds a needed flavor and is none the harder to prepare than the latter known preparation. —New York Post.

What Is Really Needed.
"Somebody has invented another talking machine."
"That's a stupid thing to do. Won't these scientists ever learn that what the world needs is listening machines?" —Chicago Record.

To the poet, to the philosopher, to the saint, all things are friendly and sacred, all events profitable, all days holy, all men divine. —Emerson.

The man who has not passionate local attachments can never become patriotic in any broad or generous sense.

Travelers shudder with horror at the thought of the train-wrecker who stealthily undermines the supports of a railway bridge and precipitates a passenger train with its load of precious human freight to a horrible death by fire and water. There is a deadlier enemy than the train-wrecker that menaces not only travelers but stay-at-homes. Its name is indigestion. It slowly undermines the supports that hold up the bridge of life and yearly precipitates untold thousands into the dread valley of consumption. If people will only take the right precaution they can avoid this calamity and even remedy it after it has occurred if they will act in time.

All cases of indigestion and every disease that has its inception in indigestion or faulty nutrition are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It cures wasting diseases. It is an unfailing remedy for nervous prostration. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve tonic. Thousands have testified to its merits. There is nothing else "just as good." Druggists sell it.

"I beg leave to inform you," writes Mrs. J. Shely, of No. 1207 Thomas Place, Minneapolis, Minn., "that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cured my trouble in my neck—Gout. It went away in three months. At the sixth bottle it began to grow smaller. Before it had grown larger very perceptibly. I am very grateful for the cure."

Healthy babies. Healthy mother. Healthy father. These are what you find in the homes that have a copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. Send at once one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. Cloth binding, 31 stamps.

WHAT TO EAT.

Some Sensible Suggestions That Should Be Posted In Every Household.

Aristonito, writing in that excellent gastronomic journal, What to Eat, makes a few sensible suggestions in regard to the diet that ought to be posted in every household. He says that the healthiest and purest lives come from those who do not eat meat before the age of 15.

Potatoes, sliced thin and fried, are indigestible. While tasting delicious, they afford no real nourishment and cause a derangement of the liver.

Onions clog the stomach. All rich pastry is poison to the liver. Soft caramels and creams are also bad for any one with a liver at all rebellious.

When you get old, look out for your food. Do you every notice that grandfather's face is not as jolly as it used to be? His strength of mind also seems slowly disappearing, though he is getting fleshier every day. He needs a change of food. Probably he has been eating buckwheat cakes and sirup, white bread and butter, sugar, fat meats, etc. Give him lean meat and fish, cracked wheat and potatoes, barley cakes, rye bread or southern corn cakes. Try it, and instead of moping and sitting round the house all day you will find him running around lively as a cricket.

Maybe, on the contrary, he is growing thin and pale. Then he needs buckwheat and molasses, fat meats, mashed potatoes in milk, northern corn, cracked wheat and fish, oatmeal porridge and fruits every morning.

All rules have their exceptions, and the diet described for the mass may not answer for exceptional cases, but the following directions are good for the majority:

Milk is the simplest and most natural food. If you cannot drink it, your stomach is in a diseased condition. Cheese is a good substitute, if mild, fresh and made from pure milk and cream. Persons who live mostly on vegetables have the best nerves and the best complexions. Red pepper is an excellent condiment. Its effect upon the liver is remarkable. Malaria, intermittent fever or any other chronic disease endures the presence of red pepper. Pure red pepper (drawn as tight as you can) be on every table.

The health of a man largely by improper food. A man who is in a bad condition will not live long.

On Man's Food Pots.

Dr. Mead has written a much written about the process of man producing to be his most intelligent and, though in one or two complete instances the results of the late have been rather surprising in this presumption. One of the most interesting instances was a pair of men which he called his "joke pots." He used to receive a large number of contributions from English and American friends, all purporting to be true and worthy of an illustration by him. I knew, at least several instances where friends of mine have sent him texts which he very soon afterward used to good advantage. As these contributions arrived he threw them into one of these "joke pots" by way of filling—a row kind of pigeonhole. Then when a moment arrived in which he had to scratch his head for a subject, he would dip his hand, or rather his arm, into this lottery and fish up one contribution after the other until he found one that might be regarded as a prize ticket.

In order that he might insure himself against repetition he received the routine of never putting a contribution back into the "joke pot" from which he had selected it, but deposited it in the second vase, until the first one had been cleared. Then he took the second one and emptied all the lottery slips back into the first, and so on, daily varying with the worthiness and rejecting his money to those best adapted to his purpose. The fact that these two "joke pots" were kept so well supplied by friends who volunteered contributions to us in itself ample testimony to the personal claim widely known to be true. —The Weekly.

1. The J. C. Stubbs Scholarship of Fifty Dollars to the Normal student (graduating students excepted) who has the best record for scholarship and character for the Academic Year.
2. The Alumni Scholarship of Fifty Dollars to that member of the Freshman Class who has the best record in scholarship and character for the present Academic Year.
3. The J. C. Stubbs Scholarship of Fifty Dollars to the member of the Junior Class or the Sophomore Class who has the best record in scholarship and character for the present Academic Year.

A Peculiar Accident.

That one cannot be too careful in handling anything belonging to electrical plants is demonstrated by the fire that consumed one of the power houses of the Union Traction company in Philadelphia. At the hour of closing an employee swung an enormous crane to which was attached a very heavy chain. The chain struck a generator and shivered it to fragments. A terrific explosion followed every circuit, and all the dynamos which were running were blown out. Fire immediately followed the explosion, and the dynamos, of which there were eight, were either destroyed or disabled, and the entire inside of the building was cleared out. The loss was something like $500,000, largely on the valuable machinery in the building. —New York Ledger.

Doing Well.

"How long have you been patronizing that new laundry, Mokey?"
"Can't be over a month. I've only had to buy three new outfits of linen." —Detroit Free Press.

I have always thought that what was good was only what was beautiful put in action. —Keweenaw.

Every man is a king in his own back yard. —Ram's Horn.

Nevada.

Nevada is the victim of circumstances. Rich in the potentialities of material greatness, and therefore strong in the capacity to support a social structure, she presents the baffling paradox of a declining population in a western state. If she were located in South Africa, the nations of Europe would plot and struggle for possession of her minerals, lands and waters; if in New South Wales, the colonial government would employ the public capital to reclaim her deserts and to enable the surplus population of Adelaide to make their way to her rich; if in Germany, the German government would charter her harbors to operate under a commercial flag, preparing the land for settlement and building habitable houses, to be purchased by home seekers on generous terms; if in Holland, the servants of the little queen would extend the admiralty colonies which have flourished for 17 years, graduating thousands of needy men from beggary to tenantry, to be tenantry to proprietorship. —William F. Fyffe in Forum.

Weeping and Crying.

"Don't cry," he entreated.

BACCALAUREATE SERVICES.

Prominent among the scenes of the closing hours of the University for the year 1897 were the Baccalaureate services of last Sunday. The hour and the special occasion had been named for services of a religious as well as an instructive character. Rev. Samuel Unsworth opened the services with an invocation, followed by Rev. G. K. Owens of the Adventist Church, who read the beautiful hymn, "O Day of Rest and Gladness," which was sung by a double quartette composed of Messrs. Start, Boalt, Merrill and Leonard, Mrs. Eichelberger, Mrs. F. C. Lee, Mrs. Boalt and Miss Bourne. A psalm was read by Rev. F. C. Lee and the anthem "Shepherd of Thine Israel Lead Us," was given by Messrs. Start and Boalt, Mrs. Lee and Miss Schadler.

President Stubbs explained the purposes of the Baccalaureate services, showing in them our dependence upon God and the necessity of the love of God and fellow men, and in an impressive prayer he asked the blessing of God on the efforts of the graduates and on the past and future of the University. After an appropriate song by the choir, President Stubbs introduced John J. Valentine, President of Wells, Fargo & Co., who delivered the address of the day on the subject of "Social Evolution." Mr. Valentine in a scholarly manner showed the difference between organic and social evolution inasmuch as the former comes from the ordinary course of life while the latter is brought about by higher ideals and the active striving of men in the hope of bettering the condition of humanity.

He outlined the changes in character of past ages, how the cruelty and barbarity of the ancient Romans and Greeks that was at the time believed to be proper has been abandoned under more advanced and Christian influences. Even two hundred years ago a prophetic view of the modern American Republic would have been considered wild and fanciful, and the European governments or the scientific and industrial progress of to-day would have been an improbable dream.

It to this had been added a view of modern commerce and political freedom with accompanying church and benevolent organizations of the present time, the prophet would have been pronounced a lunatic. If such progress has taken place in little more than a century, the speaker asked, what may be expected in the future. Further, that the present with all of its corruption and unrest is merely a transition to things that are better and of a more progressive character. The great force that is leading humanity at the present period towards a higher plane of life is the ideal or example set by that saviour of man, Christ.

Mr. Valentine then addressed the graduates, giving them practical advice, sound and uplifting. In the course of his address he told them of temptations in life, disappointments and obstacles that would harass their pathway, but added good advice and that the opportunities in the world were before them and much depended upon their course. It was in their power to make useful men or women, or on the other hand to simply go through life without accomplishing any good.

His address was earnest and practical and doubtless impressed every one present. Far from being pessimistic it was hopeful and encouraging, and outlined a path for the young people just starting out in the world with varying hopes and fears as to the future.

After Mr. Valentine's address an anthem, "Mighty Jehovah," was rendered, and Mrs. O. T. Bender offered a prayer.

The congregation arose and sang "America," and were dismissed with a benediction by Dr. Stubbs.

All who attended the services felt grateful to the University management for the impressive exercises, and doubly so to Mr. Valentine for his earnest and practical address.

The Inter Society Debate.

An interesting debate took place at the University last evening between the two University societies. The question presented was—"Resolved, that Greece in her efforts to annex Crete should be supported by the powers." Affirmative, Miss Alice Thompson, Miss Amy O. Edmunds and Mr. Geo. H. Jones. Negative, Mr. H. E. Crutcher, Mr. A. Doyle and Guy Waltz. The moderator presided and Hon. C. H. Beckman, Hon. A. E. Cheney and Hon. B. F. Currier acted as judges. The debate was spirited and instructive, each participant showing a careful study of the subject in hand. The contest was carried out in detail and the weak points carefully guarded by the speakers on opposite sides. During the waits or delays vocal and instrumental music was introduced as a variation.

At the close of the debate the judges retired, and in due time Mr. Unsworth announced the decision, viz: that the affirmative side had won and that the J. E. Stubbs prize should be presented to Mr. H. E. Crutcher. Major Huftaker in an appropriate address presented the prize to Mr. Crutcher, which seemed to please the audience, judging by the applause.

TRIBUTES OF LOVE.

done may and often does differ, depending on association or position, yet, whatever the manner, the purpose thus to cherish the memory of the departed, ever has and ever will attain a common chord of sympathy in human nature, whether it is the loved one, quietly placing a flower, or a community assembled to collectively decorate, or in whatever manner the respect of the living for the memory of the dead may be shown.

Who has not been thrilled with emotion while reading that beautiful "Dirge of Adonis," by Bion, the poet from ancient Smyrna?

Whose spirit of patriotism has not been refreshed by the ceremonies of each recurring 30th of May, under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic, when the emblem of memory and hope is with hallowed recollection by kindly hands placed above the resting place of a soldier of our armies. Why? Because he was an associate in the stupendous work of preserving the integrity and perpetuity of this nation, wherein is centered so much of the hope of the nation.

We, as Odd Fellows, also set apart a day when may be decorated with spring's fragrant bloom, the resting place of those who were members of one of the grandest armies known to history. An army that since its organization in America, April 19, 1819, has advanced with steady progress and increasing strength as a ministering angel of good to humanity. The Grand Army of Philanthropy, waging a relentless war "against vice in all its forms." Our purpose is not to destroy men and their habitations, but to refine, relieve and elevate our fellow man.

On December 31, 1895, we had enrolled in this army 799,985 members and as allies 233,043 Rebekas, making a grand total of 1,033,028 loyal Odd Fellows, banded together for the accomplishment of good, and good only. During our history we have buried 193,730 members and furnished relief to the amount of $71,288,702.95.

To the memory of those who were engaged in this great benevolent work, but have finished their course, passing to the awaiting unknown, is this commemorative oblation offered.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, wherever there is a resting place for the dead, may be found Odd Fellows, with often above them in granite and marble the three links, to indicate through all coming time the fraternity to which, as honored members, they belonged.

As an organization thus commemorating the memory of our dead, what are we, that we should claim the confidence of our fellow citizens?

We are known as a secret fraternal society.

Secret societies naturally result from that characteristic in man to seek exclusive confraternity, which had reached a high degree of development, long anterior to the historic period, particularly in matters of ceremonials, the leading features of which have consequently come to us from a remote antiquity, burdened, it may be, to a greater or less extent with what is traditional, imaginative and illusory, but well calculated to inspire with awe the mind of the period in which they originated.

Whether we consider the peculiar ceremonials of secret societies as resulting from the inherent nature of our organism, or an afterward acquired taste, makes little difference, the fact remains, secret societies with their ceremonials are constituent elements of the social economy, so ancient in origin, so universal and comprehensive in purpose as to defy all antagonism. Under different civilizations they have undergone modifications and borne different names, but as a general thing have been progressive, and often misunderstood and misrepresented by the initiate.

Let us glance at the history of the world, that has passed where, we observe, that before Ramesses was born there stood in the valley of the Nile magnificent structures in which the members of the imposing Egyptian Mysteries met for counsel and for comfort. Of these Moses was an initiate.

The Astartean Society flourished in magnificence in the land of Assyria before geometry was invented.

The Dionysian method was in perfection among the Phoenicians before Chryseis was allotted to Agamemnon.

When Numas was an infant the Etruscan ceremonies were in their splendor on the banks of the Tiber. Zoroaster Buddha Confucius and the good and great of the ancient world were initiates of some one of these fraternities called in the language of the times "mysteries," in whose dazzling ceremonies was a philosophy, combined with a religion in the impressive portrayal of the prevailing conception of life, death and man's obligation to man.

While this method had its place in and was suited to the age of picture language, charming the imagination and securing the affection of the world that then was, we find that it is to-day in perfect accord with the genius of highest culture. As long as the mind delights to wander through the land of dreams or dwell in the realm of fancy, will these mystics be perpetuated.

All the glittering ceremonials of these fraternities are but methods for illustrating impressively some principle considered essential in developing the humanitarianism of our nature.

para passu, with the intellectual progress of the race.

These different fraternities are but different interpretations of the same teachings of existence, colored it may be, by the special tendency of an age or time.

There is a ceaseless conflict between those tendencies for the good of man, and those for his injury, from which is evolved a condition requiring the wisest precaution and most disinterested watchfulness for the conservation of society.

In proportion to the tendencies toward error, incorporated into an organization, is the result disappointing to its promoters.

The attentive student of history will discover evidence of this along the pathway of humanity. It is said that division is evidence of error, and this might lead to the inquiry, why so many secret societies? And where is the error in this apparent division of the efforts of mankind? The philanthropist with the philosopher might answer. It were useless to inquire the reason, since they are enduringly established, and destined for greater achievement. While the historian and logician would answer, man is not wholly emancipated from the curse of error, and while in this state of finite, mass, where variety is not inconsistent with unity, these fraternal societies are, from different standpoints, moving on lines converging to a common center, and none will question that there is work for all.

In organization or as individuals we should not retard progress, nor dwarf the spirit of friendship, we must advance with the age, develop with its civilization, or fail in our mission.

A secret society that would simply preserve the ceremonials of an extinct civilization would be rather curious than useful; it might be interesting as a relic of what has been, but could be neither a criterion for the present nor a hope for the future.

Such a society should be based on principles as elastic as time, as progressive as thought, and as pliable as matter, and in all its operations should be in accord with the spirit of the age, there should be nothing in ritual or ceremonial perpetuating error or injustice.

Nor is it material in our civilization that a fraternal society should claim an ancient ancestry.

In fact the word "ancient" as applied to secret societies, is but a relative term. Masonry, the most venerable, is modern compared with numbers; the Fellow Craft degree is subsequent to grammar, logic, arithmetic, astronomy and music; the level and square were in use before Masons met on a level and parted on the square. Before Masonry was formalized, architecture was in a high degree of perfection, and the principles of geometry had been taught in Arabia and Phoenicia, so when we leave the ideal and come to the real, all our fraternities are modern, so far as ancient only as they may have transferred some of the formularies of the ancients.

Such was the condition under which the fraternity of Old Fellowship was organized in their western world, not in opposition to, or as antagonizing any other fraternity, but for the purpose of re-establishing practical fraternity among men, and such is its history and such its guarantee for the future, that we can safely say, Odd Fellowship exemplifies the highest type of friendship among the living by carrying out the injunction, "to bury the dead, protect the widow and educate the orphan."

Within the purview of this we assemble to-day to commemorate the memory of our dead, and in all this as in the vicissitudes of life and conditions of fortune, we as our predecessors of the centuries ago, are endeavoring to solve the problem of life and hasten the period when friendship, in truth, shall rule our race.

Our fraternity in this great work erects its monuments along the pathway of humanity. Wherever is human will, there is the angel of Odd Fellowship to comfort and sustain.

We have planted our banner upon the ramparts of human woe. We have caused the desert of misfortune to blossom with the rose of consolation.

We have dissipated the fogs of despondency from the hearts of our associates that the star of hope might illumine their pathway.

We teach the lesson of responsibility to the law of creation and association while disdaining any relation to religion or political division.

The constant reminder is to "regard our lodge as our family," and our mission "the diffusion of the principles of benevolence and charity," among the children of men; but it is not what we profess, it is what we do for the good of humanity that will entitle us to the confidence and respect of our fellow travellers to the great unknown.

We will be measured more and more, as thought advances, by our practical achievements, and it is in this direction that our order is as it should be progressive, in the furtherance of which we have an invaluable ally in the Rebekah branch of the order.

The work being done by this magnificent association of our women challenges the admiration of all.

To bind up the wound of one bleeding heart and make a life cheerful is worth more than all the pompous ceremonies devised by the ingenuity of man.

In these our assemblings in memory of our dead, let it be emphasized that we engage in no idle and meaningless ceremony, but that it is a lesson to the living of friendship and love, those attributes divinely possessed by humanity, for the ennobling of our lives.

We cannot change the condition of the dead nor fathom the mystery of the spirit habitation.

Could the veil that hides them from us be for a moment withdrawn, we might hear them in chorus sing:
Vanished too, are the thoughts, the dim, unsatisfied longings;
Such are the turrets of cloud, into the ocean of dreams;
While in a haven of rest my heart is riding at anchor,
Held by the chains of love, held by the anchor of truth.

Quality
In canned goods is a leading feature of the successful grocery store. The buyer must depend upon the label to a great extent, and reliability is a faithful guide. In every line of groceries that we handle quality and reliability are more to us than cost. Giving better goods than can be obtained elsewhere for the same money brings added trade that more than offsets shaded profits.

FLAGS AND FLOWERS DECORATE
THE RESTING PLACE OF THE DEAD.

Appropriate Memorial Exercises in Honor of Those Who Are Now No More.

Reno's tribute yesterday to those who have solved that awful mystery called death was not only equal to similar occasions of former dates, but served in its sublime teachings as an impressive lesson of honor and respect for the heroic dead, love of country, fraternity, charity and loyalty as well as loving remembrance of those who have served their mission on earth and have fallen into that sleep that knows no waking, except at the call of the trumpet that announces the day of Resurrection.

In accordance with the proclamation of Grand Marshal H. E. Stewart, the military and civic societies gathered at the place of rendezvous and at the hour named the procession was quickly formed without confusion and in the order assigned and took up the line of march to the silent home of the dead.

First came the Grand Marshal and aids Messrs John Evans, John Sunderland, Geo. Becker, John Hamlin and Raymond Reese all mounted and wearing the sash that indicated their rank and authority. Hoskins' band was next in order followed by Company C. N. N. G., as escort to General O. M. Mitchell Post G. A. R. and Mexican Veterans and the University Cadet Battalion as a guard of honor.

Then came the officers of the Day in carriages, a large number of Odd Fellows, a delegation from Amity Lodge No. 8 Knights of Pythias and the Woman's Relief Corps in carriages. A long line of citizens in carriages completed the procession. As a whole the display was creditable and demonstrated the respect that every true American feels for the old veterans under whose auspices, this day of all days in the year is made not only one that warms the heart of the patriot, but bids him bow in humble reverence to the Nation's dead.

At the Hillside Cemetery, Dr. J. E. Stubbs as President of the day for the G. A. R. opened the exercises with appropriate remarks followed by prayer by Rev. Frederic C. Lee and music by the choir. Gen. C. C. Powning as Orator then delivered the following beautiful tribute to the Nations heroes living and dead.

And while the impressive words were wafted on the breeze and spread in sound waves far and wide, like wavelets, from a stone cast on the bosom of a placid lake, hearts were saddened and then made glad again by the eloquence of the speaker.

In Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty, we again invade the bivouac of the country's precious dead. The starry emblem of the Union reflects the beauties of Heaven upon the earth below, thrilling the American heart with electric thoughts of a nation one and indivisible. Nature's sweet aroma of roses and lilies and all choice flowers gives new perfume to the laurel wreath, the bougainvillea grateful and liberty loving people offer, as a covering for every wound or scar, unseen or in sight.

The Grand Army of the Republic, indeed. The best, the bravest, the greatest that ever fought on land or sea. History records the heroes and heroisms of the Napoleons, and Nelsons, and Caesars, and Alexanders, and Charlemagnes, and Bruces, and Tels, but the record from the time of the flood until the world shall be destroyed by fire is niched in the Temple of Liberty for the Grand Army of Washington, of Lincoln, of Grant, and Sherman, Meade, Sheridan, Logan, Hancock, Thomas, Hooker, McPherson, McClellan, Garfield, Farragut, Porter and the Mother of the Bickerdykes. All hail then the idea of that unknown private soldier from Cincinnati in 1863 that the poets should have the floral offering laid upon the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Union, and that a time be fixed for some observance in their honor, which animated General Logan to instruct General Chipman to lose no time in promulgating the order for Memorial Day.

The Grand Army, indeed. We ought to commemorate the achievements of the greatest of all wars. Half a million men lost their lives in fratricidal strife, the last cartridge that exploded taking with it the immortal spirit of Father Abraham. The human tongue is utterly unable to describe the suffering and loss entailed by the bitter struggle of those four long years. But liberty and nationality finally prevailed and when the smoke and clouds had reached the skies, and all of the same faith and kindred could realize the fearful mistake that had been made, when slavery was really killed, and the only flag gave equal shelter and liberty to all, the national fracture began to knit together and grow strong; the veterans who had faced each other upon the bloody field clasped hands once more as brothers; the palm and pine were planted side by side in sacred revolutionary ground, and the United States came forth from the crucible more powerful and more united than ever before—a nation truly free and independent, preserved, strengthened and glorified, proving that the union of these States, "the guardian of freedom and safety of all and of each," is solidified by every occasion that puts it to the test.

How quiet it is here now, however: No sentinel challenges our approach; no sudden beating of the drum calls the sleeping post to arms; the camp fires have gone out; there are no pickets, no tents, and the artillery has not been massed to resist a surprise. No soldiers are gathered in groups by smoldering embers to whisper of home and friends, to decipher messages from father or mother, child or sweetheart, brother or sister, to relate to one another the soul stirring incidents of brave men, who, in the hour of their country's peril, shouldered their muskets or girded on their swords in defense of all that was most dear to them. Even the humble bugler is dumb, the early sutler speechless, the busy Orderly idle, the ambitious Captain mute, and the impatient war horse breaks not the silence with plaintive neigh. Everything betokens perfect security and rest, the only entrenchment, a grave, the only guard, unrelievable and changeless death, with a little blue-eyed, golden-haired angel, with wings of love, flitting from one to the other, carrying Divine messages of praise and homage as a reward of merit for duty well performed.

But the war-like scenes return. We behold again the moving columns, see their waving banners, the sun light gleaming from gun barrel and bayonet, the musket's flash and cannon's roar and flame, the bursting of shell, the smoke and dust, the shower of bullets, the rattling of musketry and the discharge of artillery, the advancing, retreating, gaining, losing, the attack on the left, until the thunder from the guns is like one prolonged peal of Jove's own artillery, and the boys in blue, without flinching a moment, or faltering as their ranks are thinned, braver than the gallant Six Hundred of olden poetry rush up the hill, regardless of the fire in front or on their flank, and with a courage sublime, continue the contest for life or death through black-stained smoke and the thick haze that mingles with the clouds where lightning's flash and thunder rolls, and throughout the darkened night defy the crashing, killing volleys until the morning sun on old Lookout reveals the Star-Spangled Banner casting its benign influence on four States restored to a Union that shall never end.

Yonder lies one who was at Vicksburg; he was in at the investment, assault, siege, and at the surrender on that never to be forgotten memorable 4th of July. His post was behind the bullet-proof sandbags for protection against the hand grenades of the enemy's parapet, and although shot and shell kept up a continual scream in the terraced and mined bluffs and hills, no thought of retreat entered his mind until the white flags gave notice that the Union was sure to be saved, and "his long, weary march, hard fighting, ceaseless watching by night and day in a hot climate, exposure to all sorts of weather, to diseases and, worst of all, to the gibes of many Northern papers that came to him saying all his suffering was in vain, that Vicksburg would never be taken," were at last at an end, and he dreamed that night it was sweet to die for one's country. There rest two who marched through Georgia. There are some living ones here in front of us who can excel me in portraying the suffering endured in that grand march, smashing things from Atlanta to Savannah, every man fully determined never to surrender, making a body of men, taking them man for man, officer for officer, that could not be equalled in a great battle by the same number of men of any nation. In that narrow cell remains the bones of one who was lost in the Wilderness, and was thrown out of the exploded mine of Petersburg. Think of it—forty-three days from the Rapidian to the James, with the bloody and terrible battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna and Cold Harbor, which for endurance and bravery on the part of the soldiery of the Army of the Potomac has rendered all connected with it illustrious in the eyes and hearts of their fellow countrymen, for their wholen enemy has ever since admitted that Lincoln was right when he said the people of the South and everything they possessed were safer in the hands of the Union than out of it. This and that and others are relics left before Richmond, and no song or story can tell with what unflinching valor they marched and suffered, and suffered and marched to their untimely fate.

Sweet peace forever to the ashes of all whose death maintained union and liberty for the United States and enabled millions to enjoy the precious fruits of their toil. How very appropriate that miniature flags, bearing the stars and stripes which they upheld, adorn their beds, while solemn minute guns keep time to every wave caused by Old Glory welcoming the tottering steps of old comrades, whose very lives put added fragrance into the buds and blossoms with which they sacredly, reverently indicate a loving past and hope of the immortal future. Let not the country forget the dead or the living, and may the God of Battles impress upon all hearts the beautiful lesson inculcated by Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty.

Under the sod and dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the blue,
Tears and love for the gray.

Wailing music and solemn march, and graves decked with flowers, foster no hate to-day, but tell the cost at which liberty was sustained and the Union was saved, in furtherance of the inscrutable marking of the Divine Arbiter of the Universe that this country, occupying the fairest part of the North American continent shall forever be the patrimony of a united people.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK.

History has no greater record of patriotism, of courage, of valor and of sacrifice than that made by the noble heroes, whose graves a thankful people every year strew with the symbols of affection and gratitude, and the tiny little flags speaks to us of a courage that never faltered, of a devotion that never doubted, of a lofty and unselfish faith to the highest duty of the citizen. Let the silent patriots again know that Republics are not ungrateful, but that in death as well as in life those who fought that we might live, shall always have the most fragrant flowers, and that young and old shall hold their example in honor and make the world better for having lived in it.

This, then, shall be a country contentaneous in patriotism, in territory in population, in literature, in education, in science, in arts, in religion, in morality, in peace, at all times a blessing—in fine, a government specially designed for promoting peace on earth and good will to men.

And the Star Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave, O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Following General Powning, W. L. Bechtel read Lincoln's address at Gettysburg, graves were decorated, after which the procession moved to the Masonic and Odd Fellow's Cemetery where W. A. Fogg, no president with a few brief remarks called the assembly to order and L. L. Crockett as chaplain read an impressive prayer and Major F. M. Haffaker delivered the following address in an impressive and eloquent manner.

Brother Odd Fellows and Friends: In the economy of nature is a great law of compensation. It is also a law of universal operation and whether it is a condition precedent or a result subsequent may not be confidently asserted, nor is it material that it should be, since man is powerless to abrogate this law, or escape its consequences.

It matters little to us whether man was created to die, or dies in consequence of a law governing the conditions of existence after his creation, the result is the same to us—life is followed by death—therefore the antithesis of life is death, that phenomenon in our existence which is incomprehensible for the reason that by every law of logic it is incompatible, with every conception of mind or spirit, nor has it any logical or known relation as a punitive provision—the hiatus is too great for mind to span.

All we can positively assert is that whose lives shall die. After then, what?

An unanswered interrogatory of life has ever been and still is, what is the condition of the dead?

Theology and science alike leave the great problem unsolved. Science, while dealing with known facts in applying natural laws, often ventures a conjecture as to the probability of what may result from what is known.

Theology postulates with reference to the future of life, clothing it in a poetical metaphor, or the garb of despair, continued on the individual character at death.

In the domain, therefore, of either science or theology, the mind is more or less unsatisfied in its hungering for a knowledge of the unknowable, for in theology as in science the known must stop at the grave. Beyond is the domain of faith, of fancy, sometimes obscured by the mists of doubt and misgiving, here all is involved in and rests upon faith—that which gives substance to things hoped for and is the test of things unseen.

Man, with all his possibilities, is finite in purpose and execution and at most has but a few years wherein to act his part upon the living. The activity of the mind, the pouring of thought, the manifestation of spirit must be couched within a period of very short duration. From a consideration of the physical condition of our race the question might naturally arise, "What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou regardest him?" For withal the power, progress and achievement of mind, that age to age but magnified, as centuries come and go, the habitments of ambition and success must give place to the ceremonies of the grave, where the great and the small, the honored and dishonored meet on a common level.

At this point comes that beautiful custom which is co-eval with our race, respect for the memory of the dead. It seems to be an inherent characteristic of the living to in some manner, as the years pass by, recall to mind those who have died, and this is in consonance with the general wish to be remembered. The method by which this is to be

A 10 CENT QUEEN.

One Who Is Shipped All Over the World
In a Box.Imagine a queen traveling around the world on 10 cents! It seems preposterous, and yet it is a fact. There is a certain man, according to the St. Louis Republic, who will do this for any one who will send him an order, whether it comes from England, China or any other foreign country, and he says:"I have frequent demands from all parts of the world. You see, I send these queens as follows: You will notice that there are two little circular apartments in this royal carriage," and he produced a little wooden box, "one in which the queen is kept and the other for her suit. The little plug in the center of the box is solidified, candied honey, which will furnish food to the regal party until they arrive at their destination."The compartments are covered with a fine wire gauze to prevent the escape of the insects."This large one in the first compartment, the one with the delicately shaped, long body and beautiful markings, is an Italian queen bee, and she is valued at $10. I have queens valued all the way from $2 to $25."The others, in the second compartment, are the suit or worker bees, that will accompany her on the trip, not only for company, but also for the heat they will produce to keep her comfortable on the stormy voyage over the great, cold seas."After we have the bees safely stowed away in their proper compartments, we switch the little lid around and fasten it with a tiny screw at the ends, and on its top surface the address of the residence is written, the stamp is affixed, and away goes her majesty, a queen sold into slavery for the trifling sum of $10 and sent to her destination on a 10 cent stamp."Bee culture has grown so rapidly in the United States that there are few farmers now who have not a substantial apartment and who do not net a handsome income each year from the honey the bees yield, and besides the farmers there are thousands of gentlemen and ladies who are interested purely from the fascination of the apiculture."

The Paper of the Oxford Bibles.

The paper making for Oxford Bibles is a specially important and interesting part of the work. At Wolvercote, a mile or two out of Oxford, the university has a large mill for the supply of its own requirements. A good deal of the paper they turn out here is made out of old ships' sails, the materials of which, after battling with storms in all quarters of the world, come here for the purpose of being made into paper, printed in almost every language under heaven and bound up into volumes to be scattered far and wide into all the utmost ends of the earth.This Washoe paper mill has much to do with the paper of reputation that Oxford has acquired in the production of Bibles and other devotional books.
Twenty years ago and more the management here set on a valuable invention in paper making, and ever since their "India paper" has been the envy and the pride of manufacturers all over the kingdom. There are said to be only three persons living who know the secret of its make, and, though the process has never been legally protected and all the world is free to imitate the extremely thin, but thoroughly opaque and wonderfully strong and durable, paper of the best Oxford Bibles if they only knew how, all the world has hitherto quite failed to do so.It is as thin as tissue, but perfectly opaque and so strong that a strip of it three inches wide has proved to be capable of sustaining a quarter of a hun-dredweight. Over 100 works and editions are now printed on this paper.
This special advantage has very largely helped Oxford to retain the leading position which it originally gained by being the first, if not quite the first, printer of books in the kingdom and by the prestige of its name.—Chambers' Journal."God bless the Curmish village," said the priest for having saved the village from the flames which had been kindled by the lightning.
The priest was enough to say that the village was saved.THE TRIUMPH OF LOVE?
